"Bertie! Bertie!" Pinky Crossbill twittered excitedly one cold day as he called to Bertie Bird. "Come, quickly! I've found a new feeding platform where the people put out food for little birds like us!"

"Say, that's great!" Bertie trilled as he hopped outside his nest. "Where is it?"

"It's over at that new house on Oak Street," Pinky explained as they winged their way through the air. "The people moved in yesterday, and the first thing they did was to put up a bird feeding station."

"That certainly was very thoughtful of them," Bertie chirped in appreciation.

"And," Pinky added, "they don't have any cats, either."

"That makes it perfect!" Bertie exclaimed. "Cats are all right as pets, but as far as little birds are concerned, they aren't of much use, I'm afraid."

A few minutes later they reached their destination.

"Boy, look at all the goodies!" Bertie peeped. "We're going to have a feast!"

But just as they began to eat, a huge black shadow loomed over their heads. A moment later a large crow swooped down beside them. "Get out of my way and let a man eat, you little shrimps!" the crow ordered rudely.

"Hey, what's the big idea?" Bertie said indignantly. "We were here first."

"Maybe you were, small fry," the crow retorted, "but now that Blackie, the crow, is here, you'd better be leaving. Scram!"

With several quick thrusts of his long beak, Blackie sent Bertie and Pinky flying into the air. They winged to the top of a nearby tree to think things over.

"The big bully!" Bertie fumed. "There's plenty of food for all. He didn't have to shove us away like that."

"Yeah!" Pinky chirped in agreement. "Who does he think he is, anyhow?"

"He thinks that just because he's bigger than we are, he can do anything he wants. We'll show him differently!" Bertie said stoutly.

"We will?" Pinky asked, amazed. "Just how are we going to do that?"

"I don't know... yet," Bertie said, deep in thought. "But I'll think of something. You wait and see."

Sure enough, several minutes later, Bertie trilled, "I've got it! Follow me!"

With Pinky close behind, Bertie flew down to a branch just over Blackie's head.

"Now what do you want?" Blackie scowled.

"Nothing," Bertie said innocently. "We just flew closer so we can watch the fun."

"What fun?" Blackie frowned suspiciously.

"Well," Bertie explained, "the fun will start when the cat who is hiding under that bush by the house sees what a nice big bird you are. Now that you're here, I guess that mean old pussycat won't be bothering with little birds like Pinky and me anymore."

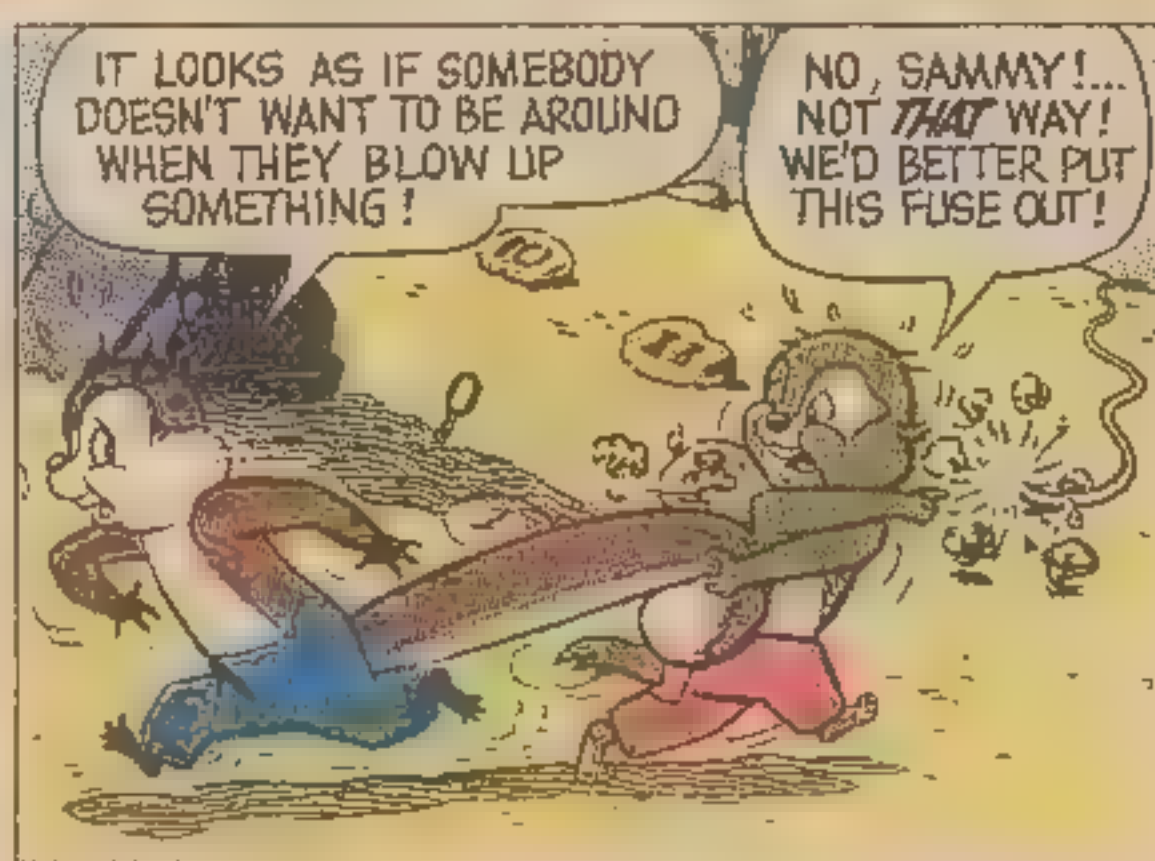

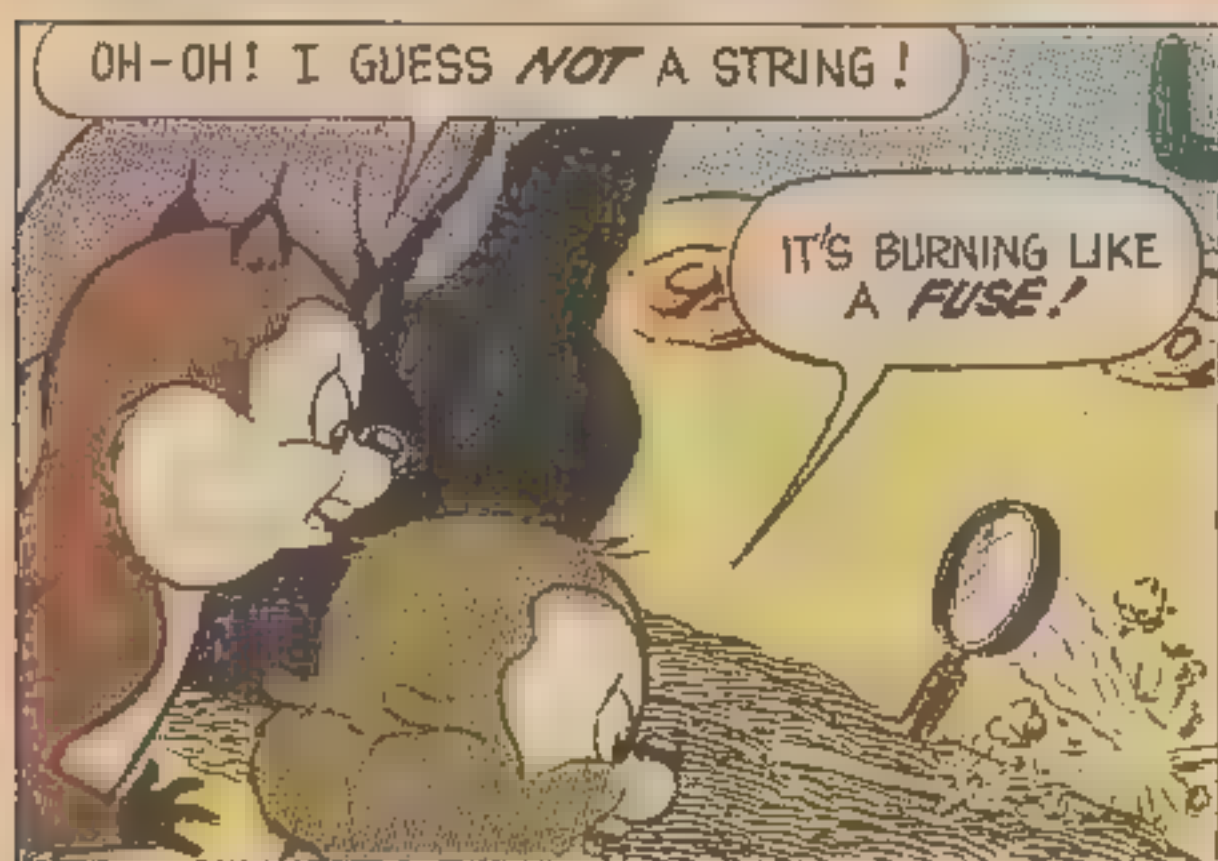

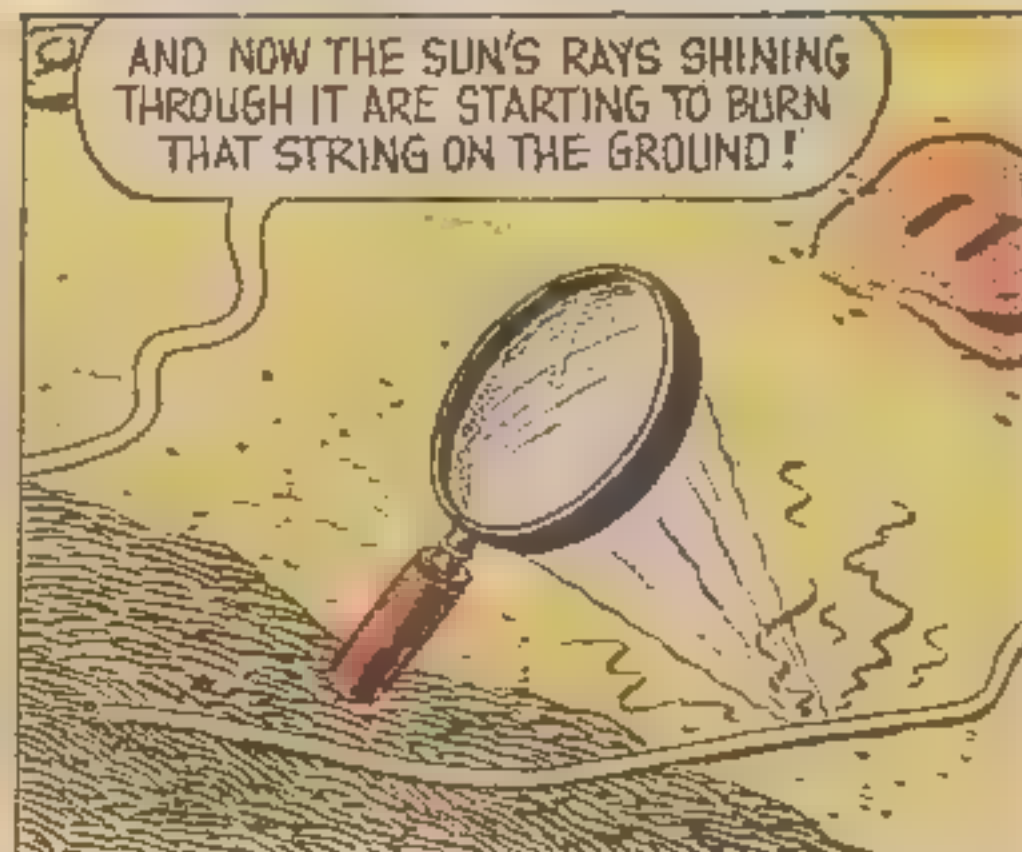

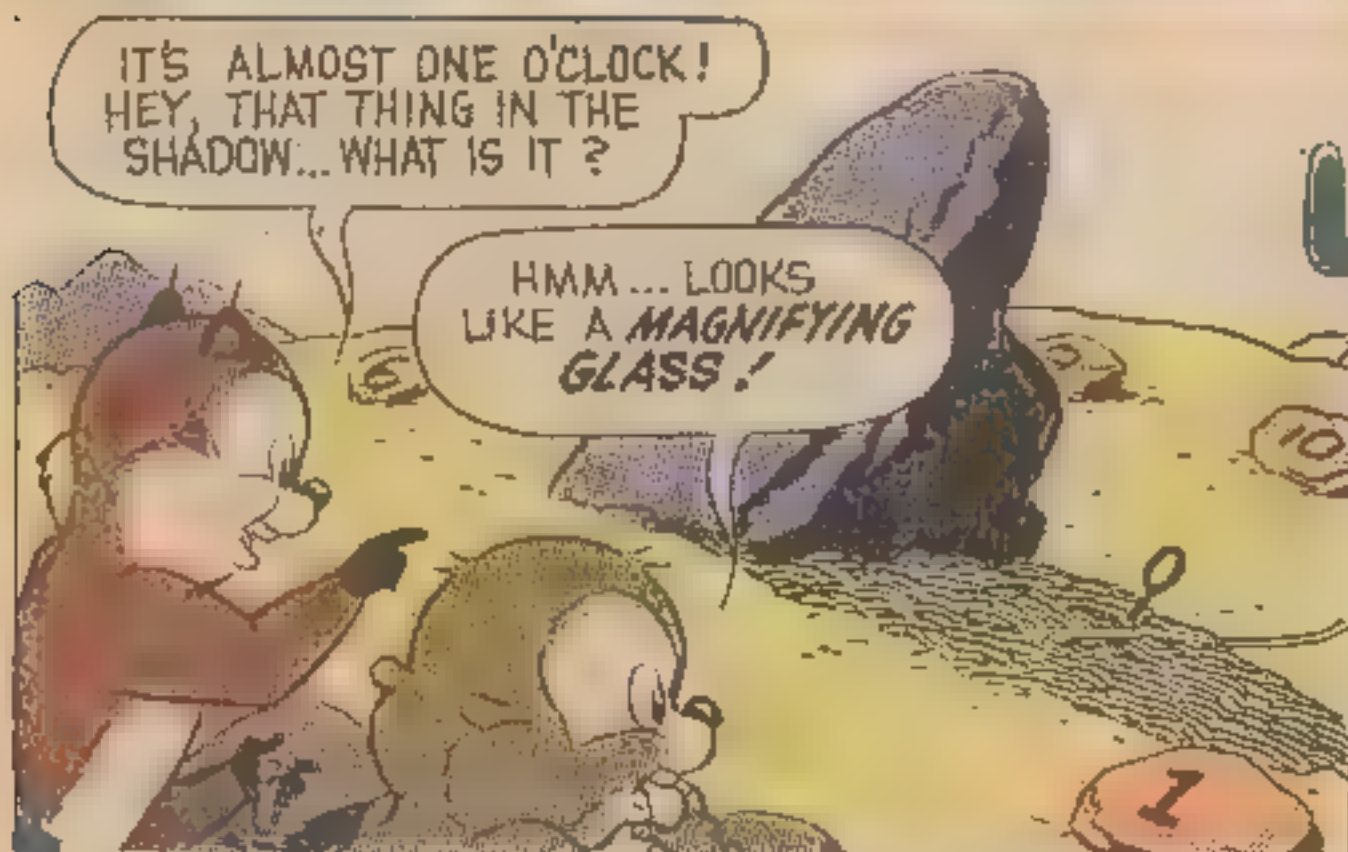

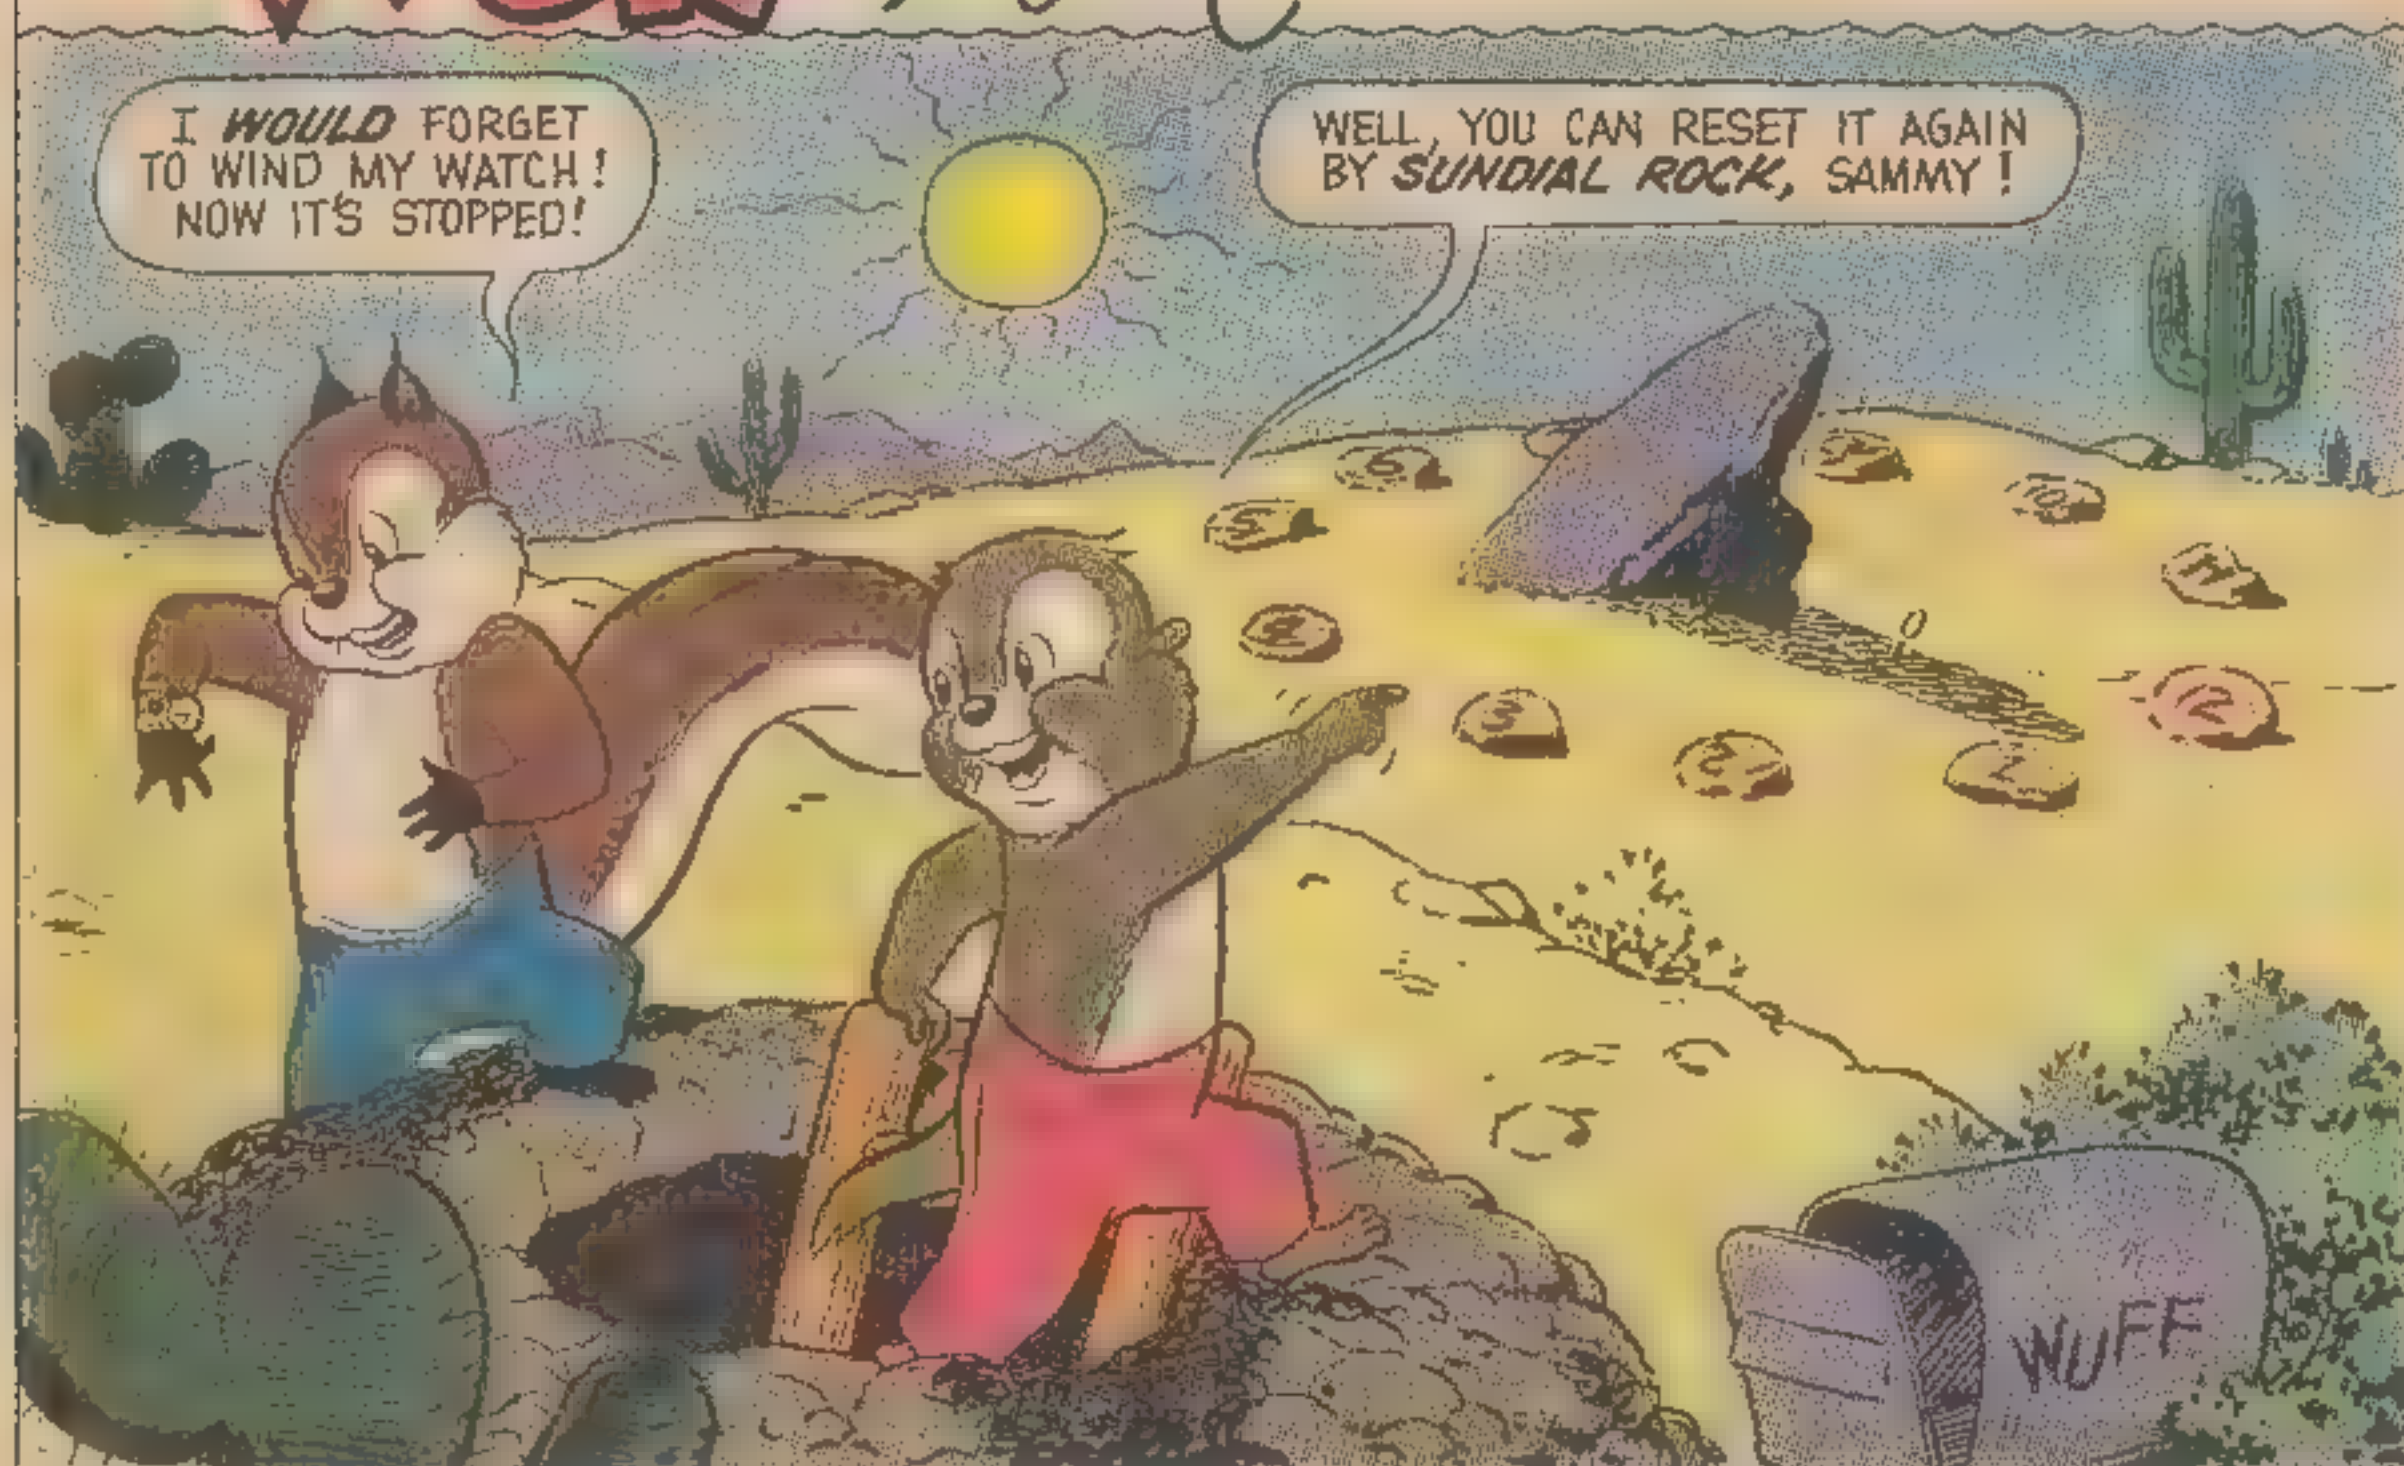

"Why didn't you tell me there was a cat around here!" Blackie cried in alarm. "You guys can stay if you want to, but I'm leaving, and for good! Birds and cats just don't mix. Anybody knows that!"

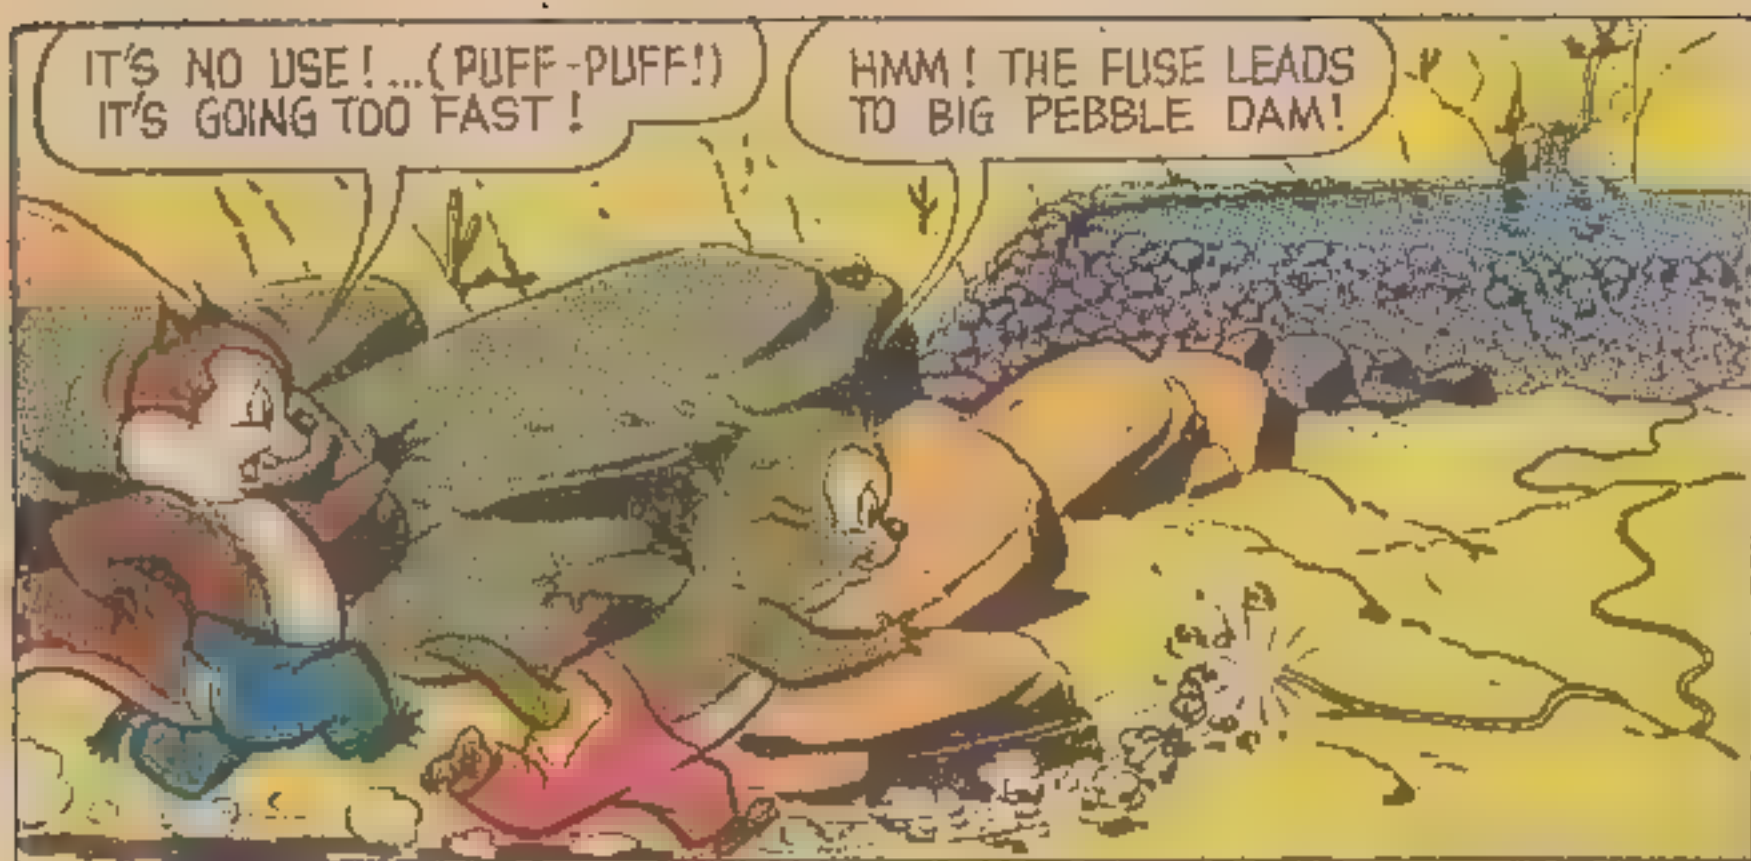

A moment later he had flown away and Bertie and Pinky were feasting in peace.

"I guess cats are good for something after all," Bertie chirped happily, "but if there really were a cat here, I'll bet he'd be awfully surprised to learn he was a scarecrow, too!"
